Renewal of pipeline deal is withdrawn

The unexpected decision to take no action on the proposal for “outsourcing” the city’s public library system by the Huntington Beach City Council wasn’t the only item that didn’t get approved.

A proposed ordinance to extend for another 10 years a pipeline franchise agreement with Cardinal Pipeline LP for the operation and maintenance of a pipeline system for the transportation of old, gas, and other hydrocarbons was withdrawn.

Cardinal has held the franchise since 2015. Currently the city receives $117,024 annually in proceeds.

The city council did approve an affordable housing agreement between

Struggle vs. Prostitution To Be In View

City wants surveillance cameras

The City of Stanton’s struggle against prostitution may be coming into focus ... literally.

At Tuesday’s meeting, the city council will consider leasing two solar-powered camera trailers that are intended to “decrease the demand for prostitution and human trafficking by increasing the risk of detention and arrest for buyers of illegal sex,” according to a staff report.

It may also deter illegal dumping, auto theft and other issues. Location of the cameras is not specially noted in the report, but they will be located on public streets adjacent to public sidewalks in “hot spot” areas known for prostitution and relocated based on need.

The video (there’s no audio) will not be live streamed and it will be available to the public for free.

In the past, certain stretches of Beach Boulevard has been a center for sex solicitations.

The rental cost for 12 months from Wireless CCTV, LLC totals $37,200 and lease is part of a co-born in 1959.

With Sputnik overhead and Elvis on the transistor radio, the tradition of community celebration that started in the 1930s with Grovers' Days was refreshed with the new Strawberry Festival, celebrating what was then the community's leading crop.

The first festival was held on the west side of Brookhurst Way, north of The Boulevard. It featured a beauty pageant, a carnival midway, a "redhead roundup" and what was touted as the "world's largest strawberry shortcake" from Priscilla's Cakebox, then the community's premier bakery.

Francis X. Bushman, the silent film star, was the first celebrity grand marshal. The one-day event was such a success that the next year The Festival was expanded to three days over Memorial Day weekend and moved to Garden Grove Park on Westminster Avenue.

There it stood until unruly crowds forced its move to the Village Green Park in the downtown area in 1973, where it's been since.

"It was a time when young people were rebelling against society," said Jan Dunn, who served as president of the Strawberry Festival Association the year it moved. "We moved the festival to its present location where it's near the police station and has better parking, and that seems to have taken care of the problem."

The festival parade, held on Saturday mornings, was illuminated by entertainment stars and other celebrities. Sex symbol Jayne Mansfield was in the 1961 parade, as was Gov. Edmund G. "Pat" Brown. Robert Kennedy rode in the 1968 event and spoke to a huge crowd at Bolsa Grande Stadium just a few days before he was assassinated.

Former vice president Hubert Humphrey was in the 1972 parade as part of his bid to win the Democratic presidential nomination that year, and more recent grand marshals have included Zsa Zsa Gabor, Shirley Jones, Buddy Hackett and Martin Landau.

Aside from the parades and carnival rides and other fun, the Festival serves as a major fundraiser for many local groups as well as for the festival association itself, which had donated millions of dollars to civic and community causes.

With an estimated 250,000 people attending each year, the Festival is considered one of the largest of its kind in the western United States; it's certainly the biggest in Orange County.

The rapid growth of the population meant huge increases in the number of students in local public schools. Garden Grove High grew so quickly that in the late 1950s, it was on double sessions.

It quickly spun off Rancho Alamitos High in 1957, followed by Bolsa Grande, Santiago, La Quinta, Pacifica and Los Amigos high schools, the latter opening its doors in 1969.

Library crash and burn; a wet Santa Ana River

Let's play a little game called "Shoulda Seen That Coming." The purpose is to guess whether or not something in the OC might reasonably be anticipated. Let's get started.

Some Huntington Beach council members on Tuesday expressed surprise over the overwhelmingly negative response to their plans to "outsource" library services to a private firm.

Should they have "Seen That Coming?"

Absolutely. They actually kind of jumped the gun. The adoption of new content rules in city libraries regarding all holdings with "sexual content" to be moved in to adult book section aroused enough opposition so when the "next" controversial library proposal was brought forward, fans of the local public library were loaded for bear.

With an election coming up in November, the controversial "outsourcing" idea may be used as a political cudgel against candidates hoping to defeat incumbent liberal councilmembers Dan Kalmick, Rhonda Bolton and Natalie Moser by tying them to an unpopular proposal.

So, the answer is: Shoulda Seen That Coming.

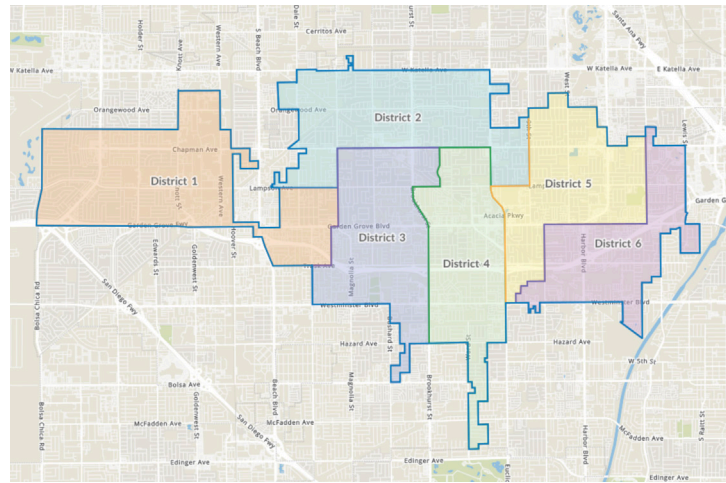

Next up is the OC Riverwalk planned for Anaheim.

As we all know, the Santa Ana River – at least through Orange County – is actually no river at all; it's more like a concrete ditch or a gigantic illegal skate-board park.

However, the river may be making a comeback in the OC in the form of OC Riverwalk,

Day after prison exit, arrested for robbery

SANTA ANA. (AP) — A man charged with taking three people hostage while robbing and Orange County bank last month had been released from prison a day earlier, federal prosecutors said last week.

The 53-year-old was indicted on robbery charges after investigators said he claimed to have a gun, jumped over the teller counter and began stuffing cash in his pockets at a BMO bank in Anaheim on May 8.

During the holdup, the man ordered the bank manager and two other employees into a storage room, the U.S. Attorney's Office said in a statement. Another employee managed to call police, and the suspect was arrested at the scene.

"One day after his release from prison, this defendant allegedly chose to return to crime by taking three victims hostage while he robbed a bank," U.S. Attorney Martin Estrada said in the statement.

Officials said he had been released from San Quentin on May 7 but didn't provide details of his previous incarceration.

After his arrest at the bank, the suspect was taken to hospital for a scan, where he tried to escape and fought with police officers, prosecutors said.

Fullerton crash tied to Tesla self-driving app

By Tom Krishner
AP Auto Writer

DETROIT (AP) — A Tesla apparently operating on one of the company's automated driving systems crashed into a parked police vehicle last week in Fullerton narrowly missing an officer who was managing traffic at another crash.

The Tesla driver told police in Fullerton that he engaged the vehicle's "self-drive" system and used his cell phone, according to a police statement.

The collision appears to be another in a long list of crashes in which Teslas using a partially automated driving system hit firetrucks or police cars parked on roads with flashing lights activated. In the Fullerton case, the officer also had put out flares, authorities said.

Police said the crash is still under investigation, but called the California driver's conduct a "clear violation of responsible driving practices and California law."

Court upholds gun ban in domestic violence cases

The U.S. Supreme Court has upheld a federal gun control law that placed a ban on firearms possession by people under restraining orders against people ordered to stay away from spouses or conjugal partners.

The court voted 8-1 to uphold the rule, intended to protect victims of domestic violence.

Chief Justice John Roberts said

the ban used "common sense" in crafting the rule

Associate Justice Clarence Thomas cast the lone dissenting vote.

The high court overturned a ruling from a Louisiana federal appeals court that said that the rule violated the Second Amendment's reference to citizen's "right to bear arms."

This ruling came a week after the high court voted 6-3 against a ban on "bump stocks" which can give a semiautomatic rifle a higher rate of fire.

Bannon wants sentencing delay on punishment

Former Donald Trump adviser Steve Bannon has made an emergency motion to the U.S. Supreme Court to ask a federal judge to delay his sentencing.

Bannon was convicted two years ago of contempt of Congress for refusing to comply with a subpoena from a House committee investigating the Jan. 6, 2021 attack on the Capitol.

Bannon is seeking to be sentenced to serve his time at a minimum security prison camp instead of a low-security federal prison. He is scheduled to begin serving his sentence on July 1.

Iowa teachers must report pronoun changes

Teachers and other educators in Iowa are required under law to report to parents if their child makes a request to use "different" pronouns that indicate a change in gender identification.

The Iowa Board of Education made that ruling as an interpretation of a new state law intended to inform parents about not just a change in pronouns but also a name "meant to affirm the child's gender identity."

Not as hot

Those who like it hot will be very disappointed; the call of thermometers hitting 90 won't be fulfilled.

Saturday's daytime high will be 84 with an overnight low of 66 under party cloudy skies. Sunday will hit 88 (67) with mostly sunny conditions. Monday begins the cooling trend at 85 (68).

Beale's Comes Alive With BBQ, Music

And scenic views at Peter's Landing in Hunt. Beach

By John M. Borack
Orange County Tribune

After visiting Smoke Queen Barbecue for our last installment of Chow Lines, I got a hankering for some more BBQ deliciousness, so I made my way down to Beale's Texas BBQ in Huntington Beach.

Located on Pacific Coast Highway near the border of Sunset Beach and Seal Beach, Beale's offers up a slew of tasty barbecue dishes. As a bonus, there is also waterfront dining with a picturesque view of the marina at Peter's Landing.

"I'm just a guy that loves to cook and bring people together," owner/pitmaster Brett Beale has said. Beale is a Santa Ana native and with the recent demise of Hambone's Barbecue, Beale's is the only Black-owned restaurant in Huntington Beach, he says.

In addition to the barbecue—the menu includes slowly smoked meats such as St. Louis ribs, brisket, tri-tip, Louisiana hotlinks and more—Beale's also features live entertainment on Friday and Saturday evenings (classic rock, blues, etc.), as well as live reggae every Sunday afternoon (when they also serve brunch). The vibe is casual and relaxed, and the servers and bartenders are friendly and attentive.

I have sampled several of the dishes during my visits, but my favorite, hands down, is the pulled chicken sandwich. The chicken is tender and juicy with just the right amount of BBQ sauce added to give it a little zing. It's piled high and sits atop just the right amount of tangy cole slaw—not the mayonnaise-laden variety, thank goodness. It's all nestled in a buttery bun and is far less messy than one would expect.

The tri-tip is tender and smoky and is also nicely complemented by the BBQ sauce; try it as part of the BBQ Twice-Baked Potato for a unique flavor combination. As far as the side dishes I've sampled, the mac and cheese is peppery and satisfying, and the collard greens come out piping hot.

Make sure to save some room (if possible) for dessert: the peach cobbler is amazing.

You can find Beale's Texas BBQ inside Peter's Landing, just down the way from Trader Joe's; the address is 16400 Pacific Coast Hwy., Unit 130, Huntington Beach, 92649.

The phone number is (562) 588-3070 and they're on the Web at www.bealestexasbbq.com.

Halo fans; an elite team ... at the turnstile

The Angels and the Dodgers are resuming their “Freeway Series” at Chavez Ravine, and the difference between those two teams could not be greater. Alone in first place is the Blue Crew, running away with the National League West flag. And then – grateful to be in fourth and not last place – there are the Halos.

For the last decade or so, the Dodgers have been one of the elite reams in Major League Baseball. The Angels, for the last decade or so, have been one of the most consistent losers in Major League Baseball.

Sports Retorts
Jim Tortolano

However, there’s one area in which both teams are near the top: attendance. From 2004 to 2019, the Angels pulled in 3 million or more fans to the “venerable” Big A. That’s not as good as the Dodgers who – not counting the pandemic years – have a three million streak running all the way back to 2002.

But considering the difference between the records of the two teams. And so far in 2024 – which is shaping us as another “long hot summer” – the Angels are fifth in attendance in the American League. Their record – by winning percentage – is (as of this writing) is 13th place.

The point I’m seeking to make is that Angel fans are a very good “team,” loyally following a rather poor one. And this happens at a stadium that’s the fourth oldest in the MLB, younger only than Fenway Park, Wrigley Field and Dodger Stadium.

It doesn’t look like at a

Mike: Recovery is Slow

MIKE TROUT is finding that recovery from his knee injury is taking longer than expected, despite a complete rehabilitation regimen (Julie Fennel photo)

Still not running weeks after a right knee injury

By Greg Beaham
AP Sports Writer

ANAHEIM (AP)— Although Mike Trout has not resumed running nearly seven weeks after surgery to repair a torn meniscus in his left knee, the Los Angeles Angels outfielder is optimistic about his recovery.

Trout provided an update on his progress Tuesday before the Angels hosted the Milwaukee Brewers. The three-time AL MVP hasn’t played since April 29.

“It’s getting there,” Trout said. “Obviously slower than I thought, but it’s the first time with a knee injury. I’m trusting the process and taking it day by day.”

The 32-year-old Trout first felt pain in his knee during a win over his hometown Philadelphia Phillies, and an MRI exam confirmed he had torn his meniscus — although he had no idea

Angels outlast Dodgers in 10th

By Pete Zarustica
Orange County Tribune

The Los Angeles Dodgers may be worlds better than the Los Angeles Angels, but you wouldn’t know it from Friday’s “Freeway Series” game in Chavez Ravine.

Taylor Ward’s single in the top of the 10th brought in Jo Adell with what proved to be the winning run as the Angels won, the game, 3-2.

The Dodgers went ahead 2-0 in the bottom of the fifth inning on a two-run home run by Shohei Ohtani (his 22nd), but the Halos matched them in the sixth, setting the stage for four more tense innings.

With the score tied 2-2 after nine innings, the game went into extra innings. Under the new rules, the 10th inning, the visitor – the Angels – started with a runner on second.

Adell was bunted over to third, bringing up Ward who singled to left, plating the runner.

The Dodgers also started their half of the inning with a man on second, and advanced him to third. But Angel closer Carlos Estevez struck out two Dodgers with Ohtani on deck and the underdogs had reason to howl.

when or how the injury occurred in a fairly normal game. He had surgery May 3.

He has progressed to workouts on a stationary bike and an elliptical machine. Angels manager Ron Washington said the team hopes Trout can resume running soon.

"Just got to get the strength back," Trout said. "Kind of felt like this last week has been a little turning point where I can start ramping it up a little bit, see how it feels. It's just trying to find exercises that don't make it ache the next day or irritate it. Finally figured something out that's been working. Just trying to get that strength back."

Trout's once-meteoritic career has stalled since the pandemic-shortened 2020 season due to a series of major injuries. Counting Tuesday night's game, Trout has played in only 266 games and missed 293 since the start of the 2021 season.

Trout seemed fairly upbeat even while acknowledging his progress has been slow. He doesn't expect this injury to linger as long as his strained calf in 2021 — a confounding setback that kept him out for all but 36 games that season.

"I can't run," Trout said. "Certain things get me kind of achy and sore the next day. Trying to limit that, because I don't want to get here and then have a setback and have this (up-and-down) thing. Just trying to progress as fast as I can the smart way."

The Angels were 29-43 heading into their second game against Milwaukee, with an offense ranking squarely in the middle of the majors in several statistical categories despite the long-term absence of its two highest-paid players.

Anthony Rendon missed his 52nd consecutive game Tuesday night with a hamstring injury incurred in late April, but the $245 million third baseman has resumed some baseball activities. Rendon has played in only 167 of the Angels' 559 games (29.9%) since the start of the 2021 season.

Trout said he is prepared to play through aches and pains when he returns to the field this summer. He has spoken with other athletes who recovered from the injury, and he knows what to expect.

"I've thought about it," he said. "It's going to slowly get better, and then there's an ache and a pain tolerance to know when to cut back on things. So that's where I'm at."

to be created in Anaheim on a stretch from Ball Road south to Orangewood Avenue.

The idea is to use inflatable dams to create a local "river" for recreation and add pedestrian and bicycle bridges from the Anaheim side to the Santa Ana "shore." Trails would be expanded and widened and the riverbank itself would be rebuilt to serve both as a flood control channel and an "amenity space."

The river does not touch Garden Grove but does flow along Huntington Beach's eastern limits.

Anaheim has received grants from several agencies and the project is still years away, but if successful, could be extended one day all the way to the Pacific Coast one day.
