Records are ordered to be seized

By Christopher Weber and Nartha Belisle
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Federal authorities served a search warrant on Wednesday at a Garden Grove aerospace facility where a chemical tank overheated last month, forcing 50,000 residents to evacuate because authorities feared a catastrophic explosion.

The warrant signed by a federal judge last week approved the seizure of documents and records related to the “storage, use, or disposal” of methyl methacrylate, the chemical inside the affected tank.

“Samples of the substance within any tank, tote, drum, vat, vessel, or container suspected of containing or having previously contained methyl methacrylate and/or any hazardous substance” were also sought, according to the warrant.

The warrant also orders agents to seize records related to “any cooling equipment or other equipment used to control or regulate the temperature of methyl methacrylate.”

The FBI confirmed its agents were searching GKN Aerospace Trans-

HB city council

The budget includes repealing a policy created to speed up the “payoff” of the city’s unfunded employee pension liability, as well as approving an updated master fee and charges schedule.

After postponing a decision at its last meeting, the council will take up a housing element update in its general plan in an effort to close out its dispute with the State of California.

A judge has imposed a $50,000 fine on “Surf City” for every month that Huntington Beach refuses to submit to the state its revised and conforming general plan amendment.

The city fought the state’s efforts to agree to zone for – but not necessarily build – 13,368 housing units. Legal efforts were unsuccessful and the U.S. Supreme Court declined to review the case.

The council will meet in closed session at 3:30 p.m. and in regular session at 6 p.m. at 2000 Main St.

Quan Nguyen.

In considering the ad hoc committee, some members rejected taking a role and another argued that the group might be unnecessary or even counter-productive.

Mayor Nguyen sounded exasperated by the discussion. Councilman Carlos Manzo argued that council participation in the running of the festival was unneeded. “Let the professionals handle it,” he said.

He also commented that he felt that in last year’s parade and celebration, some speakers took on a political tone. “If there’s one thing that will be the death of this,” he said, “it will be politicizing it.”

Over the course of the discussion, various council members volunteered and then dropped out from the proposed two-member group. Councilmember Amy Phan West offered to work with the mayor, who sharply replied, “I don’t want to work with you.”

After some doubts were expressed about the idea of an ad hoc committee, the council agreed to recast the ad hoc members as liaisons, instead.

Mike vs. Rob: it oughta be a real good scrap

I have to admit that the most interesting political contest this fall won't strictly be local. It will be a battle between the current state attorney general Rob Bonta (Democrat) and Republican Michael Gates.

What's really noteworthy is that they've been the leading actors in a dispute between the State of California and the City of Huntington Beach over how many housing units a city zone must zone to build.

Retorts
Jim Tortolano

The term is "regional housing needs assessment," and – frankly – it's a remarkably dumb overreach by the state legislature. But it's the law.

On the other hand you have (former) Huntington Beach City Attorney Gates, who thinks a charter city has the right to defy state law, based on the legal doctrine of "we don't wanna." So far the courts – high and low – have found the "don't wanna" defense charming but somehow lacking in – what's the term? Logic, perhaps.

Aside from a poor batting average, Gates has some baggage. He was appointed to a position in the Trump Administration's Department of Justice, but after 10 months in Washington he returned.

Did he quit, homesick for Surf City, or was he fired? He says he quit. There's some disagreement on that, but you can be sure it will be raised by Bonta's people during the campaign.

Will mud be slung this fall on this point? Or will the campaign be based on important issues? Will either side take the higher road?

Journalists and campaign managers agree, though: "We don't wanna."

3-alarm fire in Orange stopped from spreading

A gigantic mountain of lumber, once ignited, made for a towering blaze in Orange early on Tuesday.

According to the Orange City Fire Department, firefighters were dispatched to a commercial fire in the 2300 block of N. Batavia Street shortly after 1:30 p.m.

Arriving crews found "heavy fire conditions" involving a large wooden pallet yard threatening nearby commercial buildings. More units were summoned, resulting in a three-alarm blaze.

With the help of mutual aid fire agencies, the blaze was extinguished. Crews also put out "hot spots" after the main conflagrations shut down.

There were no injuries reported and the fire was confined to the site. Information about the case was not immediately available.

"Those voices helped shape the draft design guidelines. I encourage everyone to review the draft, share feedback and help honor Little Saigon's identity for generations to come."

Commercial bldg fire in Hunt. Bch. stopped by HBFD

A fire at a commercial building in Huntington Beach was quickly extinguished by firefighters earlier this week.

According to the Huntington Beach Fire Department, the blaze was in the 7400 block of Belya Drive (east of Gothard Street and north of Talbert Avenue).

Arriving firefighters found heavy black smoke coming from multiple roll-up doors of the commercial building.

Crews rapidly launched an aggressive attack using forcible entry techniques to gain access to the building while suppressing the fire with exterior hose lines.

Firefighters were able to contain the fire and prevent it from extending further inside the building. HBFD crews remained on the scene for several hours to conduct overhaul operations and make sure that all remaining "hot spots" were extinguished.

There were no civilian injuries. The cause of the fire is under investigation.

Could it have been D-Grove?

One of the tallest "tall tales" about Garden Grove surfaced the other day.

At a city council meeting, one of their number (we won't say who) brought out the old story that Walt Disney originally wanted to locate his park in Garden Grove and that "we turned him down."

A nice bit of folklore, but with no basis in fact. When Disneyland opened in 1955, there was no City of Garden Grove. What's now a municipality was then a growing but unincorporated town.

Also the fact is that Disney bought the land in 1953. All planning for the park required access to Interstate 5 (Santa Ana Freeway).

Paramount-Warner Bros. merger OK'd by Justice Dept.

The consolidation of the Hollywood movie industry moved a step closer on Friday with the Justice Department's approval of the merger of Paramount and Warner Bros.

According to The New York Times, the $11 billion deal would join two major movie studios; two major streaming services, Paramount+ and HBO Max and two major television networks.

The Justice Department stated in its conclusion on anti-trust issues that "the film industry is highly dynamic and the proposed transaction is not likely to harm competition or American consumers."

Legal challenges may nevertheless follow. There are ties between President Donald Trump and members of the leadership of Paramount.

Spielberg at Best: 'Disclosure Day'

We are all in for a surprise; a real world-size one

By Lindsey Bahr
AP Film Writer

"Disclosure Day" invites you into its world with a kick to the face. Or maybe it's a stomp. Whatever it is, this opening sequence, in a garish professional wrestling ring, is bound to wake you up and make you wonder, first, if you're in the right movie, and second, if Steven Spielberg has lost it.

Don't worry, he hasn't. In fact, he's on fire, making a movie that feels like the kinds he used to churn out regularly in the first half of his career.

And he doesn't make you guess for long where he's going: The camera soon finds the one person in this frenzied crowd who is as worried and befuddled as we are: His name is Daniel Kellner, he's played by Josh O'Connor (the perfect "grown up" Spielberg kid), and he is already in the middle of his adventure. The suits have found him, put a gun to his side and confiscated his backpack. A girl, Jane, has been taken hostage. And we as the audience are on a non-stop ride of discovery, wonder and thrills and, thankfully, no more wrestling.

"Disclosure Day," in theaters Friday, is a classic, big-hearted Spielberg adventure through and through, with ordinary people rebelling against shadowy secret keepers in the name of the truth. Indiana Jones wanted antiquities in museums for all to see. Daniel, and the team of people who convinced him to steal files from a private cybersecurity firm, want the world to know that there is life elsewhere and they have made contact.

Nearly 50 years after Roy Neary's close encounter, Spielberg isn't so much asking questions this time: He's blowing the whistle, in classic paranoid conspiracy thriller style (although this is decidedly more romantic than 70s-era cynical), with a turtle-necked Colin Firth as the malevolent leader of WARDEX, the company seeking to keep this information under wraps.

The story, conceived by Spielberg and scripted by David Koepp, finds us in a time and place that looks like our own. Attention is on a global conflict brewing — there are passing references to World War III, and some hysterical hoarding at the local gas station — but on a certain level everyone is going about business as usual, including local Kansas City, Missouri, broadcaster Margaret Fairchild (Emily Blunt), who is trapped in weather girl mode but dreams of reporting serious news.

She's a little flighty and unsettled, we're told, but then things start getting deeply weird: Suddenly she's slipping in and out of different languages, knowing extremely personal details about strangers, and divining all sorts of information about Daniel and the other players in this operation. Margaret and Daniel are clearly on a path toward one another, with the men in the black SUVs on their tail.

As in many Spielberg films there is a spiritual element to the proceedings of "Disclosure Day," with the believers, the skeptics and the scared all crash-

The lesson of team loyalty is being learned here. There's a lot of money selling popcorn at the Big A, but the real money comes from televised games. The average schmoe has been priced out of all but the most remote seats.

But to the extent you can make the fans feel part of the team, you can make the franchise more valuable. The Red Sox play in tiny Fenway

Quick, Throw the Ball!

Chargers want the ball out fast to help Herbert

By Dan Greenspan
Associated Press

When the Los Angeles Chargers got on the field for the first time with new offensive coordinator Mike McDaniel, quarterback Justin Herbert was instructed to get the ball out of his hands as quickly as possible on every throw.

McDaniel then told the wide receivers to be ready for those incoming passes or risk being plunked in the head.

"No one got hit in the face, and they did a great job of adapting, so I thought that was a cool way of really pushing us to get the ball out," Herbert said.

McDaniel's emphasis on quick throws is shaping up to be one of the biggest difference in the Chargers' new offensive scheme, which is intended to limit the pass rush Herbert faces and better make the most of the array of skill players around him.

Herbert took the most sacks and hits of his six-year career last season, culminating by being sacked six times in the Chargers' 16-3 AFC wild-card game loss to the New England Patriots. That defeat prompted head coach Jim Harbaugh to overhaul his offensive staff, including firing Greg Roman before hiring McDaniel in January.

McDaniel's four seasons as head coach of the Miami Dolphins saw him oversee an offensive approach with a heavy emphasis on using timing passes to accumulate yards after catch. When he first brought it to Los Angeles, McDaniel put together video cutups showing Herbert what it could mean for him.

WARDEX employee, played by Colman Domingo. He is soft coaching his unlikely heroes through the situation while he oversees what appears to be the construction of a set. It always comes back to movies, doesn't it?

Many of the greatest pleasures of "Disclosure Day" are wrapped up in our own Spielberg literacy. The movie language is unmistakably his, with shadows and lens flare and smoke, blown out lights and wet streets and all. His set-pieces are old fashioned, tactile and delightfully sane, from car chases to a thrilling sequence involving a train — apparently a dream of his since he made "Duel." And the John Williams score, a very undeniably John Williams score, is the kind that may produce goose bumps. You're never not aware that you're watching a movie in the silly ways too: Blunt's hair and makeup are suspiciously styled throughout, even after a rainstorm and days on the run. We're never quite rooted in a place despite all the talk otherwise: One might think with all the driving everyone is doing that the distances between Kansas City, Indiana and the D.C. area aren't all that far. The CGI animals look like CGI animals. And for all the specificity of a specific date for a specific character's childhood, in 1996, said child's bedroom, and pajamas, look perhaps more suited to 1966. But maybe these are just details that stick out on the first watch, the ones that will fade into the scenery as the decades go by.

While the emotional trajectory of these characters was not something I found myself especially wrapped up in, despite the good acting and sharp script, the film itself is a profoundly emotional experience in other ways. Spielberg's last three movies have all felt like farewells in some way, but maybe that's just projection. It would be wrong to

Company says it's cooperating with authorities

GKN Aerospace makes cockpit windows, canopies and windshields. The tank that overheated contained 6,000 to 7,000 gallons of methyl methacrylate, which is highly flammable. The liquid is used in the manufacturing of plastics and coatings, such as Plexiglas and dental prosthetics. Exposure to the chemical can cause serious respiratory problems, neurological issues and irritation to the skin, eyes and throat, according to the Environmental Protection Agency.

The chemical that overheated is still in the holding tank, according to the Orange County Health Care Agency, which is leading the site cleanup and waste removal efforts.

The agency had planned to pump the neutralized methyl methacrylate from the storage tanks into sealed trucks for transport and disposal starting at the end of last week, according to a press release on the agency's website. But on Friday, they said the removal didn't happen "due to unavailable resources." Once a new date is confirmed, they will provide advance notice to the community.

Responding to a request for comment on the FBI investigation, a GKN spokesperson told the AP on Wednesday morning: "We are cooperating with authorities at our Garden Grove facility and will continue to do so."

GKN Aerospace's Steve Carlin spoke at a community meeting Tuesday. He thanked the firefighters and local leaders who responded to the incident at the plant that employs more than 500 people.

many plays they had of ‘YAC’ and guys catching the ball and breaking for a touchdown, so the better I can do it, getting the ball quicker into their hands into a position where they can run with it, the better our offense will be,” he said.

The more effective Herbert can be with those throws, it should correlate into a reduction in the amount of wear and tear the 28-year-old absorbs. Herbert played through a broken bone in his non-throwing hand while taking the Chargers to the playoffs for the second straight season under Harbaugh, but he looked physically diminished at the end of the campaign as the heavy volume of contact accumulated.

If the ball comes out immediately, edge rushers will have less time to collapse the pocket and get to Herbert, especially with standout offensive tackles Rashawn Slater and Joe Alt returning from season-ending injuries.

“I think he’s just got a great feel for the game,” Herbert said of McDaniel. “He understands how defenses are ever-changing, and it’s his goal to be able to take away the pass rush. If you’re getting the ball out quickly, there’s really nothing they can do about it.”

It requires a change in mindset for Herbert, who spent much of his initial NFL tenure being asked to stay in the pocket as long as possible looking for vertical throws to maximize his precision passing and mobility.

“The emphasis of getting the ball before the receivers are even looking for it, that’s kind of the new part. In years past, where you relied on your arm strength to put the ball exactly where you need to instead of trusting it and throwing it to a spot and letting them go and get it, so I think that part’s different,” said Herbert, who has also tweaked his mechanics and footwork to match McDaniel’s demands.

The downside of that initial aggression came in the constant abuse subjected to Herbert’s body, which will be addressed with McDaniel scheming up game plans every week.

“It’s a difficult conversation because I feel responsible for a lot of those hits of holding onto the ball and trying to make something happen down the field,” Herbert said. “

But, yeah, to have an offense where we’re able to do everything, the quick game, play action, keepers, it holds the defense accountable, so I think it’s definitely good for us.”

Park (capacity 37,000 or so) yet are considered the fourth most valuable MLB franchise, worth more than $5 billion.

After years of building huge stadiums, the trend is opposite now. Nine of the 30 big league baseball teams now play in a stadium with a capacity of under 40,000 and the new field in Las Vegas (ready – in theory – to open in 2028) will be just 33,000.

There’s something emotionally appealing of the intimacy of such a place. There’s no “nosebleed” section. You don’t have to hike for a half-hour (uphill) to find a latrine.

Of course, there’s more to the economics of big sports. There’s real estate and synergy – building sport palaces surrounded by eateries, night clubs, condos, etc.

So, if Anaheim ever can get its act together about its stadium issues, it might want to start by thinking smaller, as well as having a team that plays better. A club that wins a lot is a lot more fun to join than the one that doesn’t.

think of “West Side Story,” “The Fabelmans” and “Disclosure Day” as part of an encore. But they do share an unapologetic sentimentality. Spielberg has often been wistful, warm and glassy eyed in his films, but maybe this is the kind of poignancy that comes with age. It just hits a little harder.

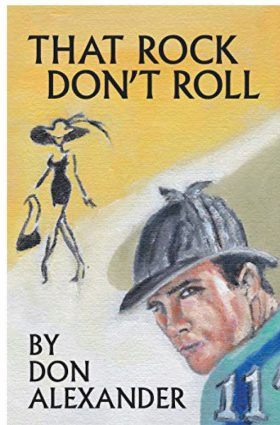

Did “Disclosure Day” make me believe in aliens or want to seek out truer documentaries about “unidentified anomalous phenomena” however? Eh ...? Mostly, it just reminded me that I believe in Spielberg. Always have.

“Disclosure Day,” a Universal Pictures release in theaters Friday, is rated PG-13 by the Motion Picture Association for “action/violence, some bloody images, and strong language.”
