Manzo With Small Lead in Mayor Race

Amy Phan West trails in District 1 election results

LOCAL ELECTION 2026

By Jim Tortolano
Orange County Tribune

There were a lot of surprises in the nationwide mid-term elections on Tuesday, but the biggest turnabout locally are results from the Westminster City Council election.

According to the latest results from the Orange County Registrar of Voters, Councilmember Carlos Manzo is leading incumbent mayor Chi Charlie Nguyen by 167 votes. That's 8,936 votes for Manzo to 8,769 for Nguyen.

Another result of note is in the contest for the District 1 seat held by the controversial incumbent Amy Phan West. David Johnson, who serves on the Westminster School District board, is leading West by 3,142 (50.94 percent) to 2,551 (41.36 percent).

Another changing of the guard that may be coming to the Garden Grove City Council is in the District 4 race, where challenger Hieu Nguyen is leading the field with 2,356 votes (36.90 percent), followed by former councilmember Patrick Phat Bui with 1,768 votes (27.69 percent). Incumbent Joe

GKN hazmat still on the agenda

Garden Grove City Council

The hazmat incident at the GKN Aerospace in West Garden Grove over the Memorial Day weekend is long over, but the follow-up continues.

At Tuesday's meeting of the Garden Grove City Council, the adoption of a resolution extending the proclamation of the local emergency related to the chemical tanks at the factory at 12122 Western Ave. will be considered.

The result of the release of vapors of the MMA chemical and the possibility of a major leak or even explosion led to the evacuation of an area affecting about 40,000 people that included parts of not just Garden Grove, but also Anaheim, Buena Park, Cypress, Seal Beach, Stanton and Westminster.

According to the staff report, "although the expected failure of the chemical tanks has been

Dirty tricks are nothing new in U.S. politics

A lot of us are following the close race for a U.S. Senate seat in Alaska between Republican incumbent Daniel S. Sullivan and Democrat Nancy Peltola and … wait … I'm leaving someone out, aren't I?

There's a third player in this drama, someone on the ballot with the interesting name of Daniel J. Sullivan.

Retorts
Jim Tortolano

Did the Democrats "plant" him on the ballot to draw votes away from the other guy with a similar name?

The controversy brought to mind some of the great political dirty tricks of all time.

Watergate was awash in political sabotage, but that backfired against "Tricky Dicky" in the long run. Other shenanigans were more successful.

In the 2000 Republican presidential battle, Sen. John McCain of Arizona was doing well against Texas Gov. George W. Bush until Lee Atwater, the king of political mischief, cooked up a phony poll in which voters were asked if they minded if McCain had fathered an illegitimate child (totally false).

It was dirty but it worked and "W" won the nomination, which led us to "hanging chads" and the long count of the Florida balloting that put him in the White House.

Dick Tuck was famous on the Democratic side. He arranged to have a group of pregnant women at the 1972 Republican convention wearing signs that read "Nixon's the One."

While it's difficult to imagine him as some sort of love

Hilton's short night at GG's Hyatt Regency

Steve Hilton didn't have a good night on Tuesday. But presumably, he had a good night's sleep in a good hotel. in Garden Grove.

Hilton, the Republican nominee for governor, was the headliner as the California Republican Party held its "victory" party at the Hyatt Regency at Chapman Avenue and Harbor Boulevard.

And as most people – and probably even himself – expected, there wasn't much to celebrate.

The networks called the race for Democratic nominee Xavier Becerra shortly after the polls closed on Tuesday at 8 p.m. He, of course, conceded.

"Maybe this isn't the best year to be running for office as a Republican," he said, according to LAist.com, in a pretty good example of understatement.

By noon the next day, the California Secretary of State's office calculated his vote share at 36 percent. "We'll plan on bringing the fight more intensely than ever in 2028," said Hilton.

Garden Grove isn't exactly Detroit, but it does have an automobile factory and a bright-looking future.

The firm got good news in September when FedEx ordered 2,000 all-electric trucks for a total price of over $300 million. Investors feel that there's a growing demand for energy storage and the power appetite for the booming AI market.

The Long Count Goes On and On...

2 Senate races remain uncalled as of Friday p.m.

THE COUNTING OF BALLOTS is still continuing in some states and cities (Shutterstock).

Two U/S Senate races and two elections for governor remain undecided as of Friday evening.

In Senate races uncalled:

• Mississippi, Democrat Scott Colom had a lead of just 43 votes over Republican incumbent Cindy Hyde-Smith with 96 percent of ballots counted. The count may continue until the Nov. 13 deadline.

• Alaska, Democrat Nancy Peltola has an edge of 626 votes over Republican incumbent Dan Sullivan with about 74 percent of votes counted.

In governor's races, Democrat Jonathan Kreiss-Tomkins leads Republican Bernadette Wilson by about 20 percentage points with roughly 74 percent of the votes counted in Alaska and in Kansas, Democrat Cindy Holscher leads Republican Ty Masterson by 5,557 votes with 98 percent counted.

Currently, results show that Democrats will hold 54 Senate seats in rhe new Congress convening in January, to 44 for the Republicans with rwo races undecided.

In the House of Represntatives, Democrats will hold at least 254 seats, to 162 for Republicans and 19 to be called.

Stephen Miller will be next White House chief of staff

Stephen Miller, described by the Associated Press as President Donald Trump's "loyal combative bulldog," will become the new White House chief of staff.

Miller, 41, will replace Susie Wiles in that position, reported the AP.

The move comes after Democrats won solid majorities in both the House of Representatives and Senate in this week's mid-term election.

Without the support of a Republican majority, the Trump Administration may turn to "a potential burst of executive actions," for the two years that remain on his second term.

Miller, speaking during the mid-term campaign, called some Democrats "extremists, freaks and America-hating lunatics" through social media posts.

Cybertruck production by Tesla to be 'winding down'

Production of the distinctive Cybertruck will be "winding down" in order to give way to the new two-seat Cybercab, Tesla CEO Elon Musk announced on Friday.

United Press International is reporting that – in a social media post – Musk called the Cybertruck "the best vehicle Tesla has ever made."

The Cybertruck is manufactured in a factory near Austin, Texas. It's unclear whether the vehicle might be built in another location later.

Launched in 2023, an estimated 20,237 units were sold in 2025, down from 36,965 in 2024.

Musk's controversial political stances are believed by some to have led to a decline in sales.

‘Godzilla Minus Zero’ is a Miss

Everyone’s fave giant lizard not up to his best

By Jake Coyle
AP Film Writer

GODZILLA does some impromptu urban renewal in Tokyo (GKIDS).

Movie Review

Fair ★★

Even Godzilla can be felled by an old hazard: the sophomore slump.

Though Godzilla has been stomping around for more than half a century, “Godzilla Minus Zero” is a sequel. It follows the quite excellent, Oscar-winning “Godzilla Minus One,” a reset for the kaiju franchise that brought Godzilla back to its postwar Japan roots.

Director, writer and visual-effects maven Takashi Yamazaki’s feel for the textures of both the scaly one and period Japan remains richly rewarding in “Godzilla Minus Zero,” which picks up two years following the previous film, in 1949. The follow-up, like its predecessor, marries human-scaled drama with a flair for stompy-stomp spectacle.

Yet those calibrations are slightly off in “Godzilla Minus Zero.” The melodrama on the ground overtakes the movie, sagging it with a bloated story that leaves you pining for the big guy to turn up again. When he does, Yamazaki’s film has the roaring thunder it needs. But too much of its lengthy runtime feels like the familiar overreach of a too-ambitious sequel.

The film picks up with ex-kamikaze pilot Kōichi Shikishima (Ryunosuke Kamiki), his wife Noriko (Minami Hamabe) and their young daughter, Akiko (Sae Nagatani). The post-WWII atmosphere of trauma and loss still permeates. The parents, conscious of the many orphaned children at Akiko’s school, warn her not to be too overjoyed when they pick her up.

Born in 1954, Godzilla arose out of atom bomb allegory. As the decades wore on, the monster series often lost touch with the grief it was born out of. While Yamazaki’s Toho Japanese-language rebirth is most immediately laudable for its dynamic yet low-budget visuals, his reclamation project is as much about returning to the concussed and traumatized mental state of postwar Japan.

So when the lightning bolt-spewing dragon Ghidorah turns up, its path of destruction is more like a haunting of previous traumas. Professor Kanji Murakami (Min Tanaka), having lost his family in the bombing of Hiroshima and watched Tokyo’s Ginza district leveled in “Godzilla Minus One,” experiences Ghidorah’s smashing of the city of Matsumoto like PTSD.

Murakami isn’t the primary figure of “Godzilla Minus Zero,” but he may be the most interesting. His vengeful fury for the occupying Americans adds a political dimension to the drama. The U.S. Army, absent in “Godzilla Minus One,” is here seen as a purely self-serving presence that wants no part of Japan’s new crisis.

Instead, putting a stop to Ghidorah falls to a ragtag group led by the naval engineer Kenji Noda (a charmingly eccentric Hidetaka Yoshioka). His team includes a newcomer: meteorologist Makoto Aoyama (Masami Nagasawa), who can predict kaiju movements based on weather patterns. Kōichi and Noriko also reluctantly join the effort, a torturous decision given that it means leaving their daughter behind, probably for good.

Laudable as the human focus of “Godzilla Minus Zero” may be, none of the characters have enough depth to carry the emphasis they’re given. Their deliberations often feel artificial and overwrought. Meanwhile, we impatiently await Godzilla like Godot. For all the movie’s earnest reckonings, he’s the most tragic and meaningful character, and it’s hard not to miss him when he’s away.

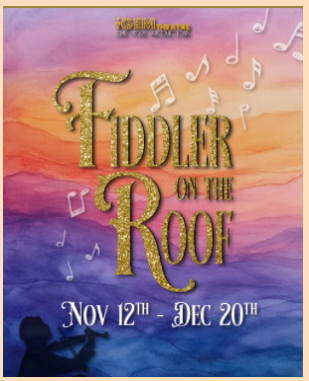

There are two massive monster set pieces in “Godzilla Minus Zero,” a relatively paltry offering if kaiju slamma jamma is your thing. It might be enough if they Can Chargers Push On?

0-7 start for Bolts a shock for everyone

By Dan Greenspan
Associated Press

EL SEGUNDO (AP) — At 0-7, the Los Angeles Chargers are nowhere near where they thought they would be this season.

Rookie edge rusher Akheem Mesidor might have best reflected the chasm between expectations and reality for the reeling club as he struggled to sum up what went wrong in a 24-9 loss to the Rams on Sunday.

"I don't know," Mesidor said. "I don't know what to say. Everybody in this locker room wants to win, and we're doing what it takes every week, the preparation to do so. But I don't know. I wouldn't know how to explain what happened."

As the 22nd pick in the NFL draft, Mesidor was brought in to provide immediate help to a team with Super Bowl aspirations. That was nothing new after he dealt with championship expectations during his last two seasons at Miami.

Mesidor had played in nothing but meaningful games for two full years with the Hurricanes, who lost their finale in 2024 to miss out on a berth in the College Football Playoff before reaching the national championship game last season.

Now, Mesidor and the Chargers would need to close the season with an incredible 10-game winning streak to have much hope of reaching the playoffs.

"Just it's all mental, really," Mesidor said of his approach. "You just got to come to work and you just try to be happy, keep a positive mindset. That's all you really can do, can control is your mindset."

Even as he said the right things, Mesidor seemed shell-shocked. That same disbelief was everywhere in the Chargers' usual SoFi Stadium setup despite being the visiting team against the Rams, and it extends well beyond that space.

Ducks hot on ice, win 4th straight

Five players scored goals for the Anaheim Ducks as they defeated the Calgary Flames 5-3 on the road on Friday night for their fourth consecutive win.

Lighting the lamp for the Orange County team were Leo Carlsson, Cutter Gauthier, Jeff Malott, Nikita Nesterenko and Tristan Luneau.

Mikael Granlund and Becket Sennecke each had two assists.

With the win, the Ducks are

9-7-1, good for 19 points and fourth place in the NHL Pacific Division.

Calgary took a 3-1 first period lead and still lead 3-2 after two periods.

But the Ducks got a power play goal from Luneau early in the third period to tie it, and Gauthier had what proved to be the game-winner at the 18:26 mark. It was his 12th goal of the season.

Nesterenko scored an empty net goal in the last minute of play for the final score.

They're next in action on Sunday back at Honda Center, taking on the Pittsburgh Penguins (5-9-2).

After that, they'll host the Nashville Predators (7-4-5) on Wednesday.

‘Godzilla Minus Zero’ summed up as ‘enhh’

were each as good as the first: an exhilarating mid-movie aerial sequence. Yamazaki has proven himself a master of dread in depth, especially when aided by Naoki Satō’s pulsating score. What Yamazaki can do with a seaplane in the foreground and an emergent Godzilla in the background is, by itself, worth the price of admission. That may be especially true on IMAX screens, on which “Godzilla Minus Zero” is first being released.

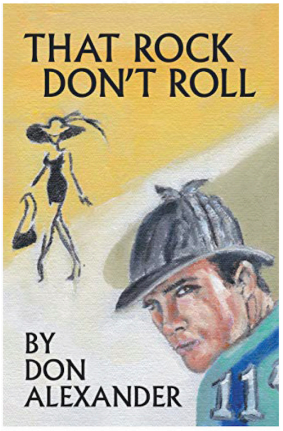

Still, if every Godzilla film is building toward its finale, “Minus Zero” doesn’t stick the landing. When Ghidorah and Godzilla face off, the melee is labored and awkwardly staged. What should be a romp instead fizzles with the on-the-ground movements of characters around them. It’s an admittedly tall task to juggle characters the size of skyscrapers with a human ensemble, but that’s the aim of “Godzilla Minus Zero.”

It could be intentional that “Godzilla Minus Zero” keeps its star attraction waiting in the wings like Marlon Brando in “Apocalypse Now.” There is a definite “Act 2” vibe to Yamazaki’s anguished and somber movie, where the Japanese aren’t just reacting to the kaiju but reconciling themselves to the continued presence of ecological disaster. The movie does just enough to whet your appetite for a third movie, should it happen. But it will have to find a numerical solution to the double-negative title of “Godzilla Minus Minus-One.”

“Godzilla Minus Zero,” a GKIDS release on IMAX screens Tuesday and in theaters Friday, is rated R by the Motion Picture Association for some violent content/bloody images. In Japanese with English subtitles. Running time: 135 minutes.

expiring contracts who could offer value to contending teams, with 35-year-old edge rusher Khalil Mack being the most obvious example.

The plan appears to be for coach Jim Harbaugh’s team to try and turn things around and hope for something that has never happened in NFL history. But for a team and organization seemingly stuck in an unending daze, hope seems to be all the Chargers have left.

What’s working

The defense continues to show progress, particularly in the first half before the lack of offensive support caught up to them. They held the Rams without a first down on five straight possessions to start the game, allowing 14 net yards, and yielding just a field goal after Justin Herbert’s first interception handed the Rams the ball in the red zone.

What needs help

Coming off a bye week with the chance to self-scout and simplify — or change their scheme or play-caller — the Chargers had arguably their most disappointing offensive performance of the season against the Rams. The Bolts have now gone 27 possessions without a touchdown across nine quarters.
